This exhibition was a project started by Nachman L'hrar, an illustration student at Ringling College, who wanted a way to connect with and give back to the veterans in his community. The project was born from his love of portraiture, and a need to connect with the men and women who served our country. It is a volunteer based program in which veterans are invited to sit one-on-one with an artist, tell their story, and have their portrait drawn. The stories heard from WWII Veterans, Korea Veterans, Vietnam Veterans, Iraq Veterans, and currently enlisted troops will stay with the artists for the rest of their lives. The artist participants were both students and faculty at Ringling College. At the end of the exhibition the portraits will be given to the veterans and their families as a gift.

August 21 – September 11

Aaron Board, full time faculty member in the Illustration Department at Ringling College presents a collection of his works.
