

Jae Jennifer Rossman from Yale University Library will be giving a talk on Monday February 19, 2018 at 11:30am in the Academic Center Auditorium.

Her topic will be: Art & Social Activism / Archives & Social Justice

Ms. Rosman will discuss why she thinks artists and archivists are natural allies in the issues of social activism and social justice. She will additionally relate the story of how the Peace Paper Project found its way to the Yale University Library.

Her talk will be in conjunction with the Peace Paper Project exhibition in the Smith Galleries that includes loans from the Peace Paper Project Archive at the Yale University Library.

Jae Jennifer Rossman is the Director, Department of Area Studies and Humanities Research Support at the Yale University Library. She leads a team of 14 subject specialists, who are liaisons to approximately 500 faculty and students in 1900 classes in a variety of disciplines, for collection development, instruction, and outreach. Previously, for over 15 years, she was the head of Special Collections at the Yale Arts Library, where she acquired artists' books and artists' archives, taught with primary sources, led the exhibition and outreach programs, and revitalized the use of the library's historic 1839 Albion iron hand press.
